This is the Allergy Treatment Set (allergy vaccine) for the recommended allergy treatment for _____. Since this treatment consists of gradually building up tolerance to various allergens to which a patient is sensitive, starting with a small but then progressively increasing dose of the allergic material, mild local allergic reactions in the form of a small amount of swelling or redness are not unusual. If such reactions do occur and are larger in size than anticipated, or cause undue discomfort, your physician has been instructed to reduce the treatment dosage at least temporarily. In most patients, no reactions of any consequence occur, and the short wait required after allergy injections in the doctor's office may appear to be an unnecessary nuisance. However, an uncomfortable and potentially serious generalized reaction can occur; even though serious reactions are very unusual, we do require all patients to remain in the office for at least 20 minutes after an allergy injection to be certain that a reaction of any consequence can be treated promptly and reversed right away.

Rarely, the onset of a generalized reaction to an allergy injection can occur even later than 20 minutes. In the extremely unlikely event that this should occur, the doctor's office must be contacted immediately, and the patient brought without delay to the office or nearest medical facility. If at hand, an antihistamine should be taken with the onset of symptoms, but if so, the patient still should contact the doctor right away. Symptoms which can represent a general reaction to the allergy injection, occurring within minutes (rarely up to hours) after injection include: generalized itching, hives, faintness, tightness in the chest, frank wheezing, difficulty in breathing or in swallowing, or hay fever symptoms. If you have any questions about this, please contact your physician.

Sincerely,

Lowell M. Jones, M. D.
